DOWN & DIRTY

"There are sh*tload of songs out there about love, and we could do more about life"

Assaad Lakkis, aka Bull Funk Zoo, on his newest album, 'Down & Dirty'. Perhaps BFZ's most aggressive and honest album to date. It pulls no punches.

Following on from his last album. BFZ produced, engineered, composed, performed and comes from a deep place inside. "We live in a distorted reality on a virtual platform with twisted politics."

The album fuses together rock, punk, blues and funk. It sounds like a Big Bad Bull fornicating and stomping the grounds to rubble.

Tracks expressing social issues like 'Fikrak', the album's only Arabic language song about the inequality gap, or 'Hey', riddled with samples of Dr. Martin Luther King's speech, 'Anarchy in the UK' the Sex Pistols cover, 'Leech' the effect of toxic people, 'Madness' and 'Read Between the Lines', questioning media propaganda.

"What fueled this album is to make music about music and not the image. Prior to virtual media, we would put on a record and make up a mental picture of the artist. There was a magical mystic about that, I want to make a dent and get people to question more, I want to revive that with 'Down & Dirty'"

Down & Dirty will be released in May 2018.
